Arab Help Is Pledged To Beirut Palestinians Also Get League Offer

member countries of the Arab League today agreed to provide Lebanon and the Palestire Liberation Organization with financial help to strengthen their defense against Israeli air and ground attacks on Lebanese territory. informed sources said.

The size and nature of the assistance was not spelied out and was believed to be left to individual countries. Lebanese Pre-mier Takieddin Solh this morning said that Lebanon had made no specific requests to the council.

The Defense Council of the 20member Arab League also agreed to step up diplomatic action to persuade the United States to restrain Israel from striking again at Lebanon and the Pales-tinian camps there, the sources

The council, which consists of the foreign and defense ministers of the league members, met here last night and today at the request of Kuwait, its present

Mahmoud Riad, the secretarygeneral of the league, told re-porters after the concluding session that the council's decisions involved "political, finan-cial and miltary assistance" but that they would not be announced. The council had been meeting behind closed doors.

Solidarity Affirmed

Mr. Riad said that the council reaffirmed the Arab countries' solidarity with Lebanon and their commitment to the defense of Lebanese territory as well as their support for the Palestinians' national rights.

Asked whether there had been any discussion of a renewal of the off embergo, Mr. Plad soid that the council's decisions were secret whereas an embargo, by definition, would have to be announced. The delegate for the Palestine Liberation Organization, Farous

Kaddoumi, yesterday urged the member states to make it clear that they would reimpose the embargo if necessary. He stopped short of calling for a reimposition of the embargo now. The council members appeared anxious to avoid any sabre-rattling. Foreign Minister Abdel Aziz Bouteflika of Algeria was reported to have urged the council "not beat the war drums" and provide Israel with a pretext to disrupt the search for a Mideast ettlement. Algeria in the past nas often taken a much more warlike stance.

The council meeting was called by Kuwait after Israeli planes struck targets in Lebanon for three consecutive days beginning June 18 in retaliation for Palestinian guerrilla operations in

Since then the Palestinians struck once more, in the Israeli seaside town of Nahariya on June 24. Israel's untypically mild reaction to that attack so far has been confined to sporadic shelling of targets in Lebanon on several

There have been unconfirmed reports of a double pressure on Israel and the Palestinians to avoid an escalation of "terror and counter-terror."

Bid to Heal Rift in Ethiopian Forces

Military Weighs Selassie's Concessions

ADDIS ABABA, July 4 (AP). Ethiopia's dissident officers took concessions from Emperor Haile Selassie to their barracks today in an effort to win broad support from enlisted men and heal a widening split in the military.

Soldiers paused in their campaign to arrest civilian opponents of their movement and gathered in the army's 4th Division Headquarters, the rebel center, to talk over the situation. Observers said continued dissension in the ranks would slow the reform movement for democratic government in feudal Ethiopia and could give the Emperor and his landowning arisocracy a chance for a comebach. Diplomats said the Emperor's promises of amnesty for political risoners and moves to speed constitutional changes, made in a palace showdown yesterday, were unlikely to satisfy radicals who want the military to have at least a share of power in a reorganized government

U.K. Plans New Ulster Assembly Convention Set On Constitution

By Alvin Shuster

LONDON, July 4 (NIT),—After fine years of trying and failing to find a political solution for troubled Northern Ireland, the British government today am-nounced new plans that called on the people in the province to mind a settlement themselves.

In a White Paper spelling out British policy, the government ordered new elections to mea members of a constitutional convention," which would have at least eix months to draft proposals for another political structure. The results would be placed before the Parliament in London for approval.

というというないというできませんというできます。

The latest eifort by the government to end the sectarian strife between Protestants and Roman Catholics came five weeks after the collapse of the previous plan. A 15-day strike by extremist Protestants succeeded in May in bringing down the provincial government, run by a ccalition of moderate Protestants and Roman Catholics.

Little Optimism

Although the reaction to the new policy was generally favor-able, there was little optimism here or in Northern Ireland that it would work. The general feeling was that London was again attempting to buy time in the hopes that some solution might eventually emerge.

"The trouble is that any long-term solution has to include extremists on both sides," a moderate Protestant said in Belfast. "But the extremists are just not going to be able to sit down at a table and come up with the solution." No date was set for the new elections, which will select 78 members to the constitutional convention. It will be presided over by a person of high stand-ing and impartiality" appointed by Queen Elizabeth II. The British government said it would play "no part" in the convention, leav-ing the decisions to the elected the government stressed that any solution emerging from the convention must include "some form of power-sharing and partnerbetween Catholics and Protestants. It stressed that the suggested solution must be acceptable to Parliament and also raised the possibility of a referendum in Northern Ireland to sample opinion on settlement proposals.

The extremist Protestants who brought down a power-sharing coalition in May were particularly fearful of developing contacts with the Irish Republic in the form of an all-Ireland council. They saw the council as a step toward unity between this province and the republic. The White Paper today placed down the idea of formal arrangements with the Irish Republic, in a move to calm the Protestant hardliners. It noted, however, that Northern Ireland shares a common border with the republic and "any political arrangements must recognize and provide for this special relationship." There is an Irish dimension, the government said.

The declaration, which was onposed by the NUM's executive. was seen as a victory for the union's left-wing.

On Tuesday, the left-wing was defeated in a vote on rival resolutions concerning the NUM's wage strategy for 1975. The conference rejected a left-wing call for wage rises of up to £20 ($48) a week, supporting instead a pro-posal to seek "substantial," but unspecified wage increases.

Lawrence Daly, NUM general secretary, warned that today's resoltuion would be widely interpreted as an expression of NUM opposition to the "social contract" worked out by the Trades Union Congress, Britain's labor union federation, and the Labor party

If he and his Progressive Conservatives cannot succeed this time in unseating Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, as they very nearly did in the last election 20 months ago, Mr. Stanfield will probably have to step down as party leader. Considering that possibility, he once said:

"I've been premier of Nova Scotia for 11 years. I've been the leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition. I'm not going to cry if that's the way I go out."

idential party arrived in Moscow. High Nixon administration ofticials are now saying in private that it was not the Washington debate between militants and moderates over nuclear controls that inhibited the negotiations, but combined caution of the Soviet and American military.

Spread throughout Mr. Kissinger's Moscow press conference were warnings of the mutual danger in the pursuit of military "superiority" by either the Russians or the Americans in a nuclear age.

At one point he exclaimed: .One of the questions which we have to ask ourselves as a country is what in the name of God is strategic superiority? What is the significance of it, politically, militarily, operationally, at this level of [nuclear weapons] number? What do you do with it?" Ee continues to insist that there is no clash between him and Defense Secretary James Schlesinger on basic perceptions. Neither will be in office when the strategic approaches they advocate become policy, a senior official noted. But it would appear that on central issues the strategy advocated by the American Joint Chiefs of Staff and singer prevailed, rather than Mr. Kissinger's.

Either because of the Soviet demands or the American military's position, or both, President Nixon emerged from the summit with protection on his political right—a major factor in the im-peachment challenge. Because he made no initiative, he cannot be accused of "selling out."

A senior American official and Soviet sources in Moscow acknowledged that an American proposal for controlling multiple nuclear warheads was rejected the Soviet Union. Soviet rces implied that the proposal was spurned before the summit talks began

The aim of the American offer was to agree on a ceiling for multiple warheads that would give an advantage to the United States, which holds a commanding lead, in return for a Soviet

U.S. Newscast Again Blocked at Moscow Center

MOSCOW, July 4 (NYT).— For the second night in a row, the Soviet television center here resterday blocked an outgoing U.S. newcast about Soviet dissent, despite a $281,000 contract to service coverage during President Nixon's visit.

CBS-TV report about the hunger strike of dissident physicist Andrei Sakharov followed an expression of "regret" by a Soviet television official because of seven blocked transmissions of newscasts by all three U.S. networks deemed to be "anti-Soviet." Last night, Murray Promson, the CBS Moscow correspondent, tried to send his report on Mr. Sakharov's altuation following the President's departure but was prevented from doing so when the technicians turned off their equipment and walked out of the studio.

Earlier, Fedor Kuznetsov, the deputy chief of the Foreign Department of the State Committee for Radio and Television, had said that "hotheaded" technicians were being told not to interrupt further transmissions.

Some U.S. newsmen privately contended that such systematic censorship could only have been the result of a higher-level decision, although Soviet officials lave attributed it to a low-ranking military on both sides wanted too much. In turn that raised the question of whether President Nixon was too weakened by Watergate to risk the wrath of the American military lobby to but a more venturesome proposal to the Soviet Union.

That was the conclusion reached by the Soviet Union, several Soviet sources said.

In their summit bargaining, an American source said, both President Nixon and Mr. Brezhnev found their military establishments were basing their demands on the highest combination of nuclear deployments imaginable.

The American source said the U.S. delegation initially regarded as incredible the Soviet military claims of what the United States might be capable of doing to the Soviet Union with present American military superiority. But, on checking with U.S. military planners, the American delegation was surprised to find the Soviet claims of existing American milltary capabilities to be plausible, it was said. This exchange was reported to have a marked impact on many U.S. officials, including Gen. Alexander Haig jr., the President's chief of staff and Mr. Rissinger's former deputy director of the National Security Council. Mr. Kissinger described these exchanges in Moscow as the most extensive discussions at that level of the arms race that had ever taken place... with an amount of detail that would have been considered violating intelligence codes in previous periods." Mr. Kissinger now plans to return to Moscow in September or October, more likely October, to pursue the negotiations. It is said to be his hope that within the next two months the internal U.S. strategic divergencies can be clarified and a new start made on launching substantive nuclear negotiations.

"Who was that recent request, referred to in the Aug. 24 [1971] memorandum, from?" Special Prosecutor William Merrill asked. "I think specifically in this instance it was the President." Colson replied. He added: "It was the President's desire and Dr. Kissinger's desire and the desire

McGovern, Humphrey Criticize Senate Unit

WASHINGTON, July 4 (AP). -Sca. George McGovern, D.-S.D., has accused the staff of the Senate Watercate committee of coming close to playing a political dirty trick against him by criticizing his campaign finances. In a related matter, a lawyer for Sen. Hubert Humphrey, D.-Minn, submitted affidavits and legal brief vesterday defend-Sen Humphrey's use of $109,000 in personal funds in his 1972 campaign for the party's presidential nomination. The committee staff had questioned the legality of the donation.

Sen. McGovern, in a letter to the committee's chairman, Sam Ervin. D.-N.C., that was released resterday, objected strongly to a leaked report in which the staff said his campaign organization may have violated the spirit of the law in settling leftover bills for less than the full

"This leaked language has already tarnished the legacy of my campaign," he said, "Indeed, all things considered. I think the preparation of such language and its circulation to the press comes far closer to the sort of dirtyricks activity which has been among the subjects of the committee's investigation."

Spirit of the Law

The staff report, which was leaked to newsmen last week, suggested that Sen. McGovern's campaign may have violated the spirit of the law forbidding corporations from donating money to federal campaigns.

It said that leftorer campaign bilis from several corporations had been settled for $35,322 less than the full amounts due, while $340,-416 raised for the presidential campaign was shifted to Mc-Govern's senatorial re-election race this year in South Dakota. Sen. McGovern said the leftover presidential funds "were not available for use in paying off debts incurred by the national McGovern campaign." He said the funds had been raised by autonomous state and local committees, and that they were sent to the Senate campaign on explicit instructions of the groups that raised them.

"These groups had authority to dispose of their remaining funds in any way they saw fit, and they chose to support my South Dakota campaign," he said.

Bad Debis

He said that, at the time when creditors of the presidential campaign were asked to swallow bad debts, it looked as though the presidential campaign would be in the red

In any case, he said other campaigns had ended with bad debts owed to corporations and [of the information], damaging no question had ever been raised about illegal corporate donations Why, then, does this standard practice become an abuse in my campaign?'

In the Humphrey matter, lawyer Joe Walters said one finding of a draft report on Sen. Humphrey's campaign was fo-tally devoid of legal support or

The staff said Sen. Humphrey might have violated the old law that limited campaign donations to $5,000 when he gave $86,000 in stock and $23,000 in cash to his own 1972 campaign.

Mr. Walters argued that the law never was meant to apply to a candidate's gifts to himself, and that the late Presidents Lyndon Johnson and John Kennedy and former New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller had used iniltions of dollars of their own money in the same way Sen. Humphrey did.

offenses as a failure to carry out the law or conduct derogating his high office.

 In debating proposed articles of impeachment two weeks from now, will the committee concentrate on evidence related to narrow questions, such as Mr. Nixon's possible role in the payment of hush money to a Watergate conspirator on March 21, 1973? Or will the committee also propose to charge the President with misconduct on the basis of evidence covering a broad array of matters, ranging from underpayment of federal income taxes to the creation of a domestic spy unit in the White House?

Voting on Impeachment "The case you have here [before the committee] is the case you're going to have before the Senate,'

Rep. Walter Flowers, D-Ala., said

Tuesday. "I will look at it as a senator voting on impeachment." But others on the committee, including Rep. Rodino, have said from the outset that, if the Judiciary Committee went beyond the mere collection of evidence, it would be usurping the Senate's constitutional authority to try impeachment cases.

Moreover, well-placed officials said that Rep. Rodino would begin emphasizing to his colleagues and the public that any major gaps in the evidence collected by the committee were the result of Mr. Nixon's defiance of subpoenss for tape recordings of White House conversations.

The withheld evidence could bear significantly on the outcome. Mr. St. Clair has said that the proper standard for weighing the evidence should be something more than mere "probable cause but not necessarily so stringent as "beyond a reasonable doubt."

Adverse Inferences

For committee members to conclude, in most central areas of the inquiry, that Mr. Nixon had committed impeachable wrongs, they would have to draw adverse inferences that the President had refused to surrender the tapes because they contained incriminating evidence.

Panel members, especially Republicans, have made no secret of their unfulfilled wish to find some item of evidence-"the murder weapon," as they jokingly describe it—that would permit a relatively easy judgment of the charges,

John Crowe Ransom, U.S. Poet, Critic, Editor

John Crowe Ransom, 86, a poet celebrated for his sharply edged frony and quiet eloquence, died yesterday in Gambier, Ohio, the seat of Kenyon College, where he was professor emeritus of poetry. A man of few verses-his "Selected Poems" contained only 50 examples of his craft-Mr. Ransom was nonetheless immensely influential as the founder of a hand of Southern poets that in-cluded Alien Tate and Robert Penn Warren. Called The Fugitives, the group rebelled against the structures of the machine age and extolled the virtues of the rural South, although not in a romantic vein.

Mr. Ransom was also widely regarded as a literary critic of the first rank, capable of flaying the hide off a wrongdoer with the greatest of courtesy.

In the Kenyon Review, a quarterly that he founded in 1939 and edited for 20 years of ceased publication in 1970), he expounded what was termed the New Criticism—a hard analysis of text and texture of the written word.

He collected many honors, including the Bollingen Prize from Yale, the Fellowship Prize from the National Academy of Poets and a National Book Award.

LONDON, July 4 (UPI).-A coroner today returned an open verdict on the death of a former British intelligence officer whose skeleton was found on June 23 in a locked room at his home almost three years after he disappeared.

By Agis Salpukas

CINCINNATI, July 4 (NYT).-A man who calls himself Hananish Israel and says he is a spiritual teacher said here yesterday that Marcus Wayne Chenault had been one of his pupils and that he had revealed to Chenault that black ministers were among the main oppressors of black people. Chenapit has been arrested and charged in the slaving of Mrs. Martin Luther King at last Sun-day. His attorney, Randolph Bacote, said in an interview that Chenault had not mentioned Mr. Israel to him, but had told him that "all his religious beliefs came through a revelation."

Mr. Israel, who lives in a room on the second floor of a house in Avondale, a mostly black restdential area, said that Chenault came to him in March and asked him to unscramble his mind. "He said that he was a college kid who didn't know anything. Mr. Israel said, sitting at a table on which rested two Bibles and his own literature. "The boy was brilliant. All I had to give him was the key to open his mind."

Mr. Israel, whose legal name is Stephen Holiman, said that most of what he described as the revelations that he passed on to Chenault resulted from long research in libraries and a reinterpretation of the Bible from a black viewpoint. Although Mr. Israel has spent

He said that Chenault had never expressed to him any intention of doing violence. "He was a friendly, jovial type," he said. "the type of fellow who slways had a hig amile."

Mr. Israel who is 68 years old and lives on a small Social Security pension and income from odd jobs as a handyman, said that when a friend told him of the shooting of Mrs. King and Chenault's arrest he was "shocked and fishbergasted."

But he added that he felt no remorse about the slaving because the late Dr. Martin Luther Kinghad been told by black Hebrews on one of his trips to Chicago that he was oppressing black people by working for racial

He recited several verses of scripture to support his view that the Bible forbids the mixing of the races.

Statement Betracted

DATTON, Ohio, July 4 (NYT). -The suggestion of a conspiracy in connection with the slaying of Mrs. King began to break down yesterday when Walter Brooks, a friend of the accused slayer, retracted his statement that he and Chenguit were members of an organization called "The Troop,"

Mr. Brooks was quoted Tuesday in the Dayton Journal Herald as saying that he and Chanault belonged to a group whose purpose is the killing of black ministers and civil rights leaders:

Miami Holdup Is a Losing Proposition

MIAMI, July 4 (AP).—Two bandits tried to rob a restairrant today, but they were poorer when they flet than when they came in and one might be finding his feet a bit sore, police said.

They said that two armed men were waiting for manager Iran Robinez when he showed up to open Lum's restaurant. but Mr. Rubinez fought the gunmen when they bried to force him to open the safe.

. Police said the bandits fled as other employees atrived for work. The gunmen left behind several items lost in the struggle with Mr. Rubinezincluding two hats, a beaded necklace, a pair of shoes and a gold watch.

The California scientists estiopened to see the rare, mated that the meteor might n the afternoon of Aug. have been more than 12 feet across and weighed about 1,100 tons. They noted that the meteor was approaching the earth at nearly 10 miles a second "and if it had been at a slightly lower altitude, the damage would have been very extensive."

"Fortunately, meteors of this size are exceedingly rare," the scientist said. Surveyer's Work

The height of the meteor's path above earth was determined from readings taken by W. T. Rogers. a surveyor, near Billings, Mont, Mr. Rogers had a theodolite, a surveyor's telescope, and he used it to make an accurate measure-ment of the height above the horizon of the meteor's thick vapor trail. The trail lingered at many places for 20 to 30 minutes.

Diplomatic Docking

When President Nixon returned to the United States on the eve of its Independence Day, it is quite possible that Americans were as much impressed by the disappointments of his visit to Moscow as by its accomplishments. Mr. Nixon's emphasis on the personal nature of his relationships with Mr. Brezhnev, the inability of American television crews to broadcast material on dissidence within the Soviet Union, the failure to achieve an agreement on limiting offensive nuclear weapons—all these loomed large in the public consciousness.

One could make a contrary argument, of course. The control of underground nuclear testing as between the superpowers has great significance, especially in the wake of the Indian blast; there were numerous other agreements on a variety of matters that will foster a sense of common interest between Americans and Russians. And even the curious imposition of censorship on the American television broadcasts had its own ironical benefits. It emphasized the existence of persons and movements within the Soviet Union that are battling the establishment there—and in a form that shows that while oppression still exists within the Soviet system, it is markedly different in form and less arbitrary than once was the case. It is not so long ago that the only information about the exercise of state power over individuals came through the distorted version of state trials, or word leaked out to the West surreptitiously.

But casting up the debits and credits of the Nixon mission in this form can convey all the excitement of an accountant bent over the ledgers of the corner grocery store. Perhaps intentionally, Mr. Nixon supplied a more imaginative figure of speech. In his talk from Moscow, he spoke of the complexities involved in Soviet-American relations, and as a technological instance cited cooperation in space exploration. There, he said, "standardization of docking techniques" would permit "international rescue missions" should a space team encounter difficulties.

Diplomatically, too, Moscow and Washington have been trying to standardize their docking techniques, not simply by making summits among their leaders routine, but by developing methods whereby policies can converge. This is a delicate and difficult process-those who have watched, heard or read about the linking of space capsules high above the earth, when two different mechanisms must be neatly joined while in swift motion, and when an error or a mechanical failure can mean disaster, will get the point. Also, no computer yet devised can rationalize the multitude of facts and emotions that govern the needs and aspirations of two great and diverse societies, to lay down precise and accurate rules for bringing them together.

The disappointments of the Moscow and Yalta meetings as well as their successes were part of the docking techniques that must be mastered. And the result, however the balance is struck, is a tribute to will and persistence on both sides. It may yet provide the means to organize international rescue missions in a crisis.

The Issues in Canada

Canada's political leaders are again giving the world a demonstration of how to conduct a civilized, responsible election campaign. The big question is whether this model effort will pay off at the polls Monday by providing Canada with an effective government after 20 months of Prime Minister Trudeau's minority Liberal administration.

There is danger that the election not only will fail to break the virtual deadlock in the Commons between the Liberals and the opposition Progressive Conservatives, but wiil intensify the polarization that is jeopardizing Canada's future as one nation.

If the Liberals win largely on the basis of a sweep in predominantly French-speaking Quebec while losing even the meager ground they had held west of Ontario, the policy differences between the federal and those of the Western provinces will inevitably be widened. Conversely, a Conservative victory achieved in face of a shutout in Quebec would widen the English-French division across Canada and strengthen the separatist movement.

To their credit, Messrs, Trudeau and Robert Stanfield, the Conservative leader, have done their best to keep the emotive language problem out of the campaign. The effort of the leaders to downgrade language as an issue was not helped by the timing of a new bill by the Liberal government of Quebec to make French the official language of the province.

This comprehensive effort to give a priority status to French in business and education has rekindled the fears of Quebec's English-speaking minority and aroused resentments all across Canada.

However, the principal issue in the election is the 10.4 per cent inflation rate that Mr. Trudeau's administration has been no more effective in controlling than most other Western governments. Mr. Stanfield has made it the centerpiece of his campaign

The two major party leaders have all but ignored Canada's relations with the United States and the emotional issue of American investments in Canada. That strategy affronts some Canadian nationalists, but it is a mark of the mature level of this cam-

International Opinion

'Argentina After Peron

Now General Peron has gone and with him, presumably, any hope that he could suddenly bring back the age which appears so gilded in the memories of many people. This could produce a healthy reassessment of present-day realities or it could inaugurate a difficult period of political polarization. It certainly leaves a big hole in the politics of Argentina. When Peron returned to power last year he was an old man in poor health with no clear program or cohesive party, but he retained some of his old skills and loyalties and managed to tilt the balance of his party away from the leftwing groups that had clustered round it in opposition. He now leaves power in the hands of his widow, who has far less experience and support. She retains his cabinet. but for how long is impossible to say. There are deep splits in the country and a strong though disunited movement on the left which feels cheated of the hopes that it built up during General Peron's exile.

From the Times (London).

Though every major political group in Argentina, including the armed forces, appears to be on their best behavior at the moment, there are many dangers facing the general's 43-year-old widow. At the first sign of renewed activity from the left, either from the Marxist guerrillas or from the radical Peronist Montonero organization, the armed forces may be tempted to move in and take over the running of the country yet again. That could well lead to something approaching civil war. The same effect would be produced if the armed forces made any sort of pre-emptive strike against the left and occupied the presidency. Either course could be disastrous for Argentina.

-From the Financial Times (London).

Nixon's Moscow Summit

Mr. Nixon's visit to Moscow seems to have demonstrated a considerable toughening of the public mood (in the United States). True, Senator Jackson has been able to obstruct concessions in trading policy until Russia shows more liberality about emigration although in practice there has still been a big expansion. There has also been increasing criticism of the 1972 nuclear arms agreement, which Russia exploited to her advantage. The arrest of Jews and dissidents, under Mr. Nixon's nose as it were, has not helped. Yet all this falls short of explaining why America has apparently been transformed into a nation of hawks, watching Mr. Nixon and Dr. Kissinger with beady eyes. eager to pounce and rend them should they make the slightest concession. . . . In reality. much of the sudden awakening to the dangers of détente is part of the psychological warfare in a vendetta against Mr. Nixon and Dr. Kissinger. It is, of course, to be hoped that the mood of increased realism about Russian motives, however generated, may persist: that the voice of the doves will remain muted.

In Congress Assembled — (Then and Now)

By Anthony Lewis

NEW YORK—"When in the Course of Human Events..."

JEFFERSON commenced the reading of the draft Declaration.

HUTCHINSON said all could agree with the general sentiments expressed, and he congratulated the gentleman from Virginia on his phrases, but the question before this Continental Congress was necessarily one of specifics. What had the King done to call for so drastic a remedy?

JEFFERSON referred to the Facts enumerated in the declaration. The king had obstructed the Administration of Justice, affected to render the military independent of the civil power, imposed taxes on us without our consent and refused his assent to laws most wholesome and necessary for the public good. There had been a long Train of Abuses and Usurcations.

The enumeration smacked too much of Policy, RHODES thought, These were actions on which statesmen might differ. A tax on tea, a few troops quartered here or there, and obstruction of justice: What did such things really matter? The king might have been wiser to adopt other policies, but mistakes were not ground for grave retribution.

DENNIS agreed. Where were the crimes? he asked. His people had no stomach for regicide and they would not want him to break with the king unless there were unanswerable proof of some

J. ADAMS said the gentleman asked for proof but closed his eyes to what all others could Did he expect a confession? This king had trampled on the legal rights of thousands; his ministers had brazenly admitted on the record. On such overwhelming evidence the ordinary citizen would long since have been indicted and jailed. Was the king to face no accounting?

LOTT thought there was more emotion than reason in such arguments. A king was not like other men. If we called him to account for his wrongs, we risk the stability of institutions. Concern should not be for the monarch but for the monarchy. Injure the order of society and no one would gain but the Radicals.

Similar sentiments were expressed by WIGGINS. The country's business was in a parlous state and it would be foolhardy to risk radical political measures. In truth he suspected that underneath the lofty language of the Declaration lay arguments of party and sect, and they must be resisted by men with a stake in the established

BARRY said the Congress should never have allowed itself to be pushed to this point. The has done nothing that other kings had not done before The press had exaggerated had maligned the king's character. Indeed, the press was the willain of the piece. It was rank

Could any reasonable man really had called for an end to his defend this king, or pretend that the case against him was partisan or biased? Why, it was only a few months since a leading figure in the king's party, SCOTT, had described his performance as "shabby, immoral and disgusting,"

The Ultimate Portfolio Manager

By Harry Weber

NEW YORK.—Theologians and laymen forever ponder and speculate about God's motivations. His demands on mankind His decision-making process, and sometimes, of course, His very existence. I shall not discuss the latter question; rather I shall assume that He exists. Instead. plan to explore the question. how does God decide who shall be rewarded and who shall be

But first, I must explain that whenever I shall refer to God's "analysis" or "evaluation" I will not really mean "analysis" and "evaluation." Being omniscient, God never analyzes or evaluates -He knows all at all times. Therefore, the discussion will not present a model of analysis that God uses, but a model of analysis that may simulate how God

Firstly, we must establish that God has a cardinal unit of morality having negative, zero and positive values. It must be a cardinal unit of lowing us to state, for example, that action A is assigned ten "morals," while action B is assigned 11 morals. Cardinality enables us to state that action B has 10 per cent more moral content than does action A.

God's Standards

Many people will surely object to such a nonrelativistic moral code. They may contend that God has different standards of behavior for different societies, so that a given practice, such as ten morals in the Western world and rate zero morals in the jungles of New Guinea. model I am hubristically constructing can accommodate the relativistic point of view through the introduction of "morality tables." Each of these tables assigns a unique moral value to a given action, depending on the society in which the action is

I assert that God seeks a minimum rate of return on each investments (human beings). Of course, there is just as much logical basis for the contrary assertion-that God has no such rate-of-return expectation for each of us. phikosophical dilemma cannot be rates of return but which are ignored, for it may be asserted that God can guarantee any moral rate of return that He desires; in fact, that if He wanted to guard against moral imperfection in mankind, He would have created perfectly moral humans. His omnipotence and omniscience make man's attempts to meet His moral expectations travesty, a charade.

A Trilogy

The problem with which we are struggling is really the result of a trilogy of concepts: God's motivation, His omniscience and man's free will. We shall never know God's motives in creating a powerful intelligent animal possessing potential for both good and evil.

However, given that God created a morally imperfect animal on earth, there is no logical conflict or mutual exclusion between His omniscience and man's free will. The fact that God knows that plan to execute action B, and that I will then change my mind and instead perform C does not obstruct my free choice of executing this series of actions.

Thus, I assert that God is omniscient, that He endowed man with intelligence and free will, and that He measures, rewards and punishes man for the moral effects of his free will. Hitler lived. Hitler was evil I assume that Hitler did not meet God's expected rate of return, and that God knew that Hitler would not meet His rate-of-return expecta-

Admittedly, such an inductive argument, deriving its strength from an example—an extreme example at that—is a poor substitute for a deductive argument. Nevertheless, I shall consider it evidence that God may utilize His prescience in "evaluating" the morality of man but does not utilize it in deciding how ŧο punish or reward him.

The Analogy

Continuing the analogy between the mortal portfolio manager and the supreme portfolio manager, we assert that the mortal portmanager concerns, or at least should concern himself with. the co-variance of the returns of the securities in his portfolio. He may suffer securities with low negatively correlated, thus reducing the variance of his portfolio rate of return God, however does not measure variances and co-variances among His assets, for such analyses would be, in effect, feeble and self-deluding attempts at prognosticating in-dividual assets returns, as well as His portiolio rate of return.

After all, He knows each man's past, present, future, and therefore lifetime rate of return. We have already asserted that He is the supreme behaviorist, deciding only on the basis of past moral

His, portfolio model is much simpler than man's, and much more demanding. No human being who is unable to clear his uniquely assigned hurdle rate remains in His portfolio.

God periodically judges each man's morally responsible lifetime to date. At these intervals He measures each human's lifetime-to-date accumulation the rate of return relevant to the present judgment period, He discounts the morals generated in each past period by that period's hurdle rate.

Reward

If a given person's discounted morals flow equals or exceeds M -the universal morals endowment of all-humans that person shall be rewarded.

However, a person who has not been productive enough in accompleting morals will have a discounted morals flow less than M—resulting in some form of punishment for his subpar performance. A person's morals hurdle rate for a given time period is determined by God via analysis" of that person's native intelligence, health, inherited wealth, innate personality, as well as of the changes in these factors over time. For example, changes in a man's wealth, health, intelligence and personality—partially due to his rewards and/or numbsh ments for past behavior—in-fluence the formulation of the hurdle rate for the judgment that this analysis even if correct has any practical utility, for no man knows the morals return God expects of him, nor the immensely complex morality table God "uses" to judge his actions. I can, however, conclude with great confidence that all believers in God should be risk-averse and assume that God has high ratesof-return expectations of the Such assumptions will tend to encourage them to greater than otherwise production attains in of-return expectations of them.

ever it was the Opera-Comique died of it was not the lack of a repertory, the proof being that the Paris Opera has been industriously refurnishing its own repertory with choice items from the legacy of the late Comique.

Actually, the Opera did not really wait until the Comique was dead, for a little more than 10 years ago, "Carmen" was empropriated from the Salle Pavart after almost 3,000 performances, to turn up at the Palais Garnier in wide screen and a cast of thousands. Now it is the turn of Massenet's "Manon." 90 years after 115 world premiere at the Comique and a career second only to "Carmen" in the house's annals.

The first appearance of "M2non" at the Opera is in a cautiously traditional production, but it is welcome, for this is the opera in which Massenet's mellifluous music and careful craftsmanship found its most grateful subject.

But this staging does not prove any more than did the earlier "Carmen," that bigger is better. There are places when the icas of intimacy is damaging, such as Matias's Act II set for the 'small room" where Des Grieux and Manon live, which did little to minimize the vastness of the Opera's siage Many of the important spoken lines were delivered with a stilted sonority that suggested preoccupation with being neard in the distant gallery.

The Frameworks

Just as Massenet sees the 18th century through 19th-century eyes, Matias has provided a scrim decorated with roses and vaguely art nouveau framework, through which each stage picture becomes gradually apparent. His colors and architecture are somewhat severe, as if to set off the richness of the costumes, Jean-Louis Thamin's staging was carefully worked out, but traditional to the point of being unadventurous.

The Opera is double-casting "Manon" and scheduling it 10 times in the final two weeks of the season. The revelation at the second "premiere" last night was tenor Jean Dupouy, a member of the Opéra's small permanent Byvirtue of an attractive range of models, AUDI NSU enjoyed a very successful year's trading in 1973. The Company was able to effect a steady improvement in its turnover, its earnings, and its position on the market.

AUDI NSU

Sales up by 34.3 %

With 398,842 cars sold, the Company's sales in 1973 rose by 101,947 units over 1972, an increase of 34.3 %. Almost half of these cars were exported. At the centre of this success was the Audi 80, which was repeatedly voted the "Car of the Year". The improved technical features and style also allowed the Audi 100 to maintain its position on the market. The popular Audi 80 range, which was extended by the addition of the sports version of the Audi 80 GT, accounted for 59 % of the Company's total sales in 1973.

increase in the share of the market On the home market, the higher sales figures led to a sharp increase in the share of the market. In 1972, a 6.8 % share of new registrations was obtained, in 1973, the share rose to 9.8 %. This meant that AUDI

NSUadvanced from seventh to fourth place in the figures of new registrations. The models offered afford the potential buyer, whose purchasing decisions are increasingly influenced by the factors of economy and suitability, a suffi-ciently wide range of possibilities from which to choose. At the end of 1973 the AUDI NSU sales-network numbered 4,643 orders in Germany and abroad year's result. Increase in AUDI NSU work-force

At the end of 1973 AUDI NSU employed a total of 33,880 persons. This was 8.7% more than the equivalent figure for 1972.

The heavy demand for ANDI NSU care led to an increased volume of production, and therefore to a better utilization of manufacturing capacity. The rationalization thus achieved, and a change of emphasis in the sales programme in favour of the more profitable models, were responsible for the improvement in earnings. At DM 45.6 million,

Energy crisis imposes nous burdens

The general uncertainty felt by motorists, which had been evident for some time, was increased by the effects of the so-called energy crisis. Continously rising running costs, together with attempts to impose speed restrictions, led to a widespread unwillingness to buy cars, and this caused a sharp break in the sales results during the period under review, starting in November. AUDI NSU's sales figures for the first six months of 1974 also sixuwed a decline...

Among the Siberian resources that will be made accessible by the Bam Railroad, as it is commonly called, is the large Udokan copper deposit, east of Lake Baikal.
The Russians have offered joint copper-development deals to Japan and France, but the absence of transportation has been one obstacle to final agreements.

Although the immediate aim of the railroad is to open up the Udokan copper reserves and other remote mineral and timber rean alternative east-west transport route to the Pacific Coast to the north of the present trans-Siberian railroad. Some military analysts have noted that the trans-Siberian runs through an exposed area close to the Chinese

The new Balkal-Amur railroad will traverse virtually unpopulated mountainous terrain 150 to 300 miles north of the trans-Siberian. The Bam Railroad will intersect a north-south line already under construction from the trans-Siberian northward to a coking-coal deposit in the Chulman district of southern Yakutia. The coal area is being developed jointly with the Japanese under earlier this year.

Coffee Group to Act In London, N.Y. Maris PARIS, July 4 (AP-DJ).—The board of Cafe-Mundial Ltd., an organization recently formed by Brazil, Colombia, the Ivory Coast and Portugal (Angola), said to-day it had decided to intervene on the New York and London coffee markets to support prices. After a two-day board meeting here, Cafe-Mundial directors agreed to authorize Cafe-Mundial to strengthen its members' poli-cies of withholding stocks from the market and to reinforce the group's financial structure.

12-Nation Energy Panel Seen Making Headway

By Clyde H. Farnsworth

PARIS, July 4 (NYT).-The borders. They could hold less oil major industrial powers have achieved certain modest progress in concerting their energy-supply policies to try to establish more stable arrangements with Oilproducing countries.

Under the impetus of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, an Energy Coordinating Group of 12 nations was set up last February. But ECG looked like just more alphabet soup for the in-ternational bureaucracy.

France's refusal to join in its work seemed to stack the card: against any useful contribution. Surprisingly, the plodding of high civil servants in technical back-room discussions has yielded some positive results. The new French government under President Valery Giscard d'Estaing 13 already considering ways of moving off the sidelines.

Based in Brussels and presided over by a distinguished Belgian Foreign Ministry officer, Viscount Etienne Davignon, the energy group has come up with ideas for sharing oil supplies, has done groundwork for reinforcing cooperation in the supply and enrichment of uranium and has studied the prickly topic of the role of multinational oil com-

The ECG's work has been in narallel with that done by the high-level energy committee of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, in which the French take full part. "Everyone has been working discreetly in back rooms-so discreetly that the general public probably doesn't know the importance of what's been accomplished in such a relatively short time," says Chris Petrow, minister for economic and commercial affairs at the U.S. Embassy in Paris.

The United States has proposed a plan for oil-sharing with Western Europe and Japan, and the ECG has been examining it in some detail. The group has power to make recommendations, but only the political authorities of the member countries could put any plan of such magnitude into operation.

Washington sets two conditions sharing U.S. oil—that there prescribed levels of oil stocking and also a program of cutting back on consumption. Enforcement would be through an international control agency. Each consumer country serve to limit consumption to specific levels during an emergency and to make its total supplies available to all on a prorata basis. But there would be allowance for countries that had developed new oil supplies outside their

in their emergency stockpiles. The idea is to show the major members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries that the consuming countries cannot be held political hostage as they were in the Middle East war last October.

Final political agreements are still some way off, but U.S. officials have been heartened by what they see as the beginning of reviving international cooperation after the disputes that were tearing the Atlantic community spart six months ago.

Most nations are now more concerned with the balance-of-payments implications of the fourfold increase in oil prices than with the question of supplies, which are expected to be more than ample this year.

With an apparent surplus of oil already exerting some downward pressure on prices. Paul Frankel, a London-based netroleum consultant, believes the producer countries will show more willingness to enter into longterm price and supply arrangements than they have in the part.

Rates Soar For Dollars, Gold Plunges Herstatt Demise Tied

To Markets' Moves By William Ellington LONDON, July 4 'AP-DJ -Short-term Eurodoliar interest rates soared to new peaks todar. contributing to an abrupt decline in gold and commodity prices as well as international bond and stock prices. At Midday in London, three-month interbank Eurodollar loans were offered at a record 14.19 per cent up from 13.88 per cent yes-terday while six-month leans ross to 14.06 from 13.75 per cent. Continuing anxiety caused by the collapse of Bankhaus Heritatt was partly responsible for both pushing interest rates higher and depressing market prices, dealers and brokers said. One particular victim of the Herstatt affair was gold. According to a well placed Swiss bullion dealer Herstatt had been speculating in gold as well as forward foreign exchange. He said that other institutions were obliged to sell gold on the cash market instead of being able to deliver gold to Herstatt at previously contract-

Drops to $129 Gold fell to $129 per ounce at the London afternoon fixing from $102.50 in the morning and $130.50 yesterday afternoon. The $7.50 per ounce drop brought the price to the lowest fixing level since Jan. 18. But later the price recovered to an average of $131 on the hope that forced sales had been completed. Pollowing an abrupt decline yesterday, copper prices declined more moderately today. Nevertheless, the price of copper cathodes and wire bars were again at new lows for the year. As with gold, the decline in base metals prices was partly attributed to high interest rates.

Although sales volume was low, Eurobond prices fell to four-year lows with the Bondtrade index for long-term straight Eurodollar bonds falling 0.74 to 84.16, its lowest level since July 1970. Stock prices throughout Europe declined and in Amsterdam. Paris and Brussels the Bourse indices hit new lows for the year.

The one beneficiary of high short-term interest rates was the dollar, which rose against all major European currencies

VITTORINI OMNIBUS In Sicily, The Twilight of the Elephant, La Garibaldina

By Elio Vittorial. Translated from the Italian by Wilfrid David, Cinina Breseia and Frances Keene. New Directions. 320 pp. $9.50 ($3.75 in paperback).

Reviewed by Herbert Mitgang

Lastring literature often cross-polificates. Terminang the strengths of past masters and adding new strains. The divine spark has little to do with re-portage or even presence turned into nonfiction fiction, meaning most of the shallow modern novels; D.H. Lawrence could transport the fantacies of Nottingham to a story infused with Indian ritual from the American Southwest, where for a few years he lived; Franz Karks envisioned a continent of the absurd in "Amerika," which he created by instinct but never visited. Transatlantic novels with staying power manage to work universal magic for readers on both shores, transcending geography and the years.

Elio Vittorini, whose final novel, "Women of Messina," ap-pears in English for the first time, ranks with the leading Ralian storytellers who could create the world in a village. The list is a fairly long one, especially about "Fontamara" and Carlo Levis "Christ Stopped at Eboli" quickly come to mind, Vittorini also sets his stories in a small frame—he was born in Sicily, son of a rail-way worker—but his writings go beyond anti-Fascism. "The country which provides the protagonist with a background and bears him company is called Sicily merely by accident," he wrote in an author's note, "merely because the word Sicily sounds, to me more harmonious than Persia or Venezuela, Moreover, I expect that all manuscripts come out of a single bottle"

He developed a style that makes his stories particularly readable. Realism is present but two other factors contribute to his brilliance as a European novelist who de-serves a wider American audience. Riest, he mastered English by translating Poe and Lawrence, Paulkner, Steinbeck and other 20th-century novelists in the Unit-ed States and Britain and these writers had a profound effect on his own sense of clarity and style. Second, some of his novell and essays were written with the knowledge that the police was looking over his shoulder— and this, rather than acting as a lock on his mind, forced him to use his wits and imagination Where the realist leaves off the fabulist begins In "Women of Messina," he creates a group of men and women groping in the ashes of postwar Italy, trying to reconstruct their lives on the site of a devastated village. A kind of commune starts up, with a cross-section of idealists and prag-matists and primitives that Vittorini gives nicknames Ugly Mug, ground and talk of the death of kines and comrades in wartime the time when partisans against cism and the German occunation straightened the spine of courage and the need to keep the In this allegorical novel subtly and Frances Keene, regeneration through simple, numpolluted living is pitted against the beginnings of the Italian economic boom Vittorini was far ahead of men and women sit upon his time in anticipating the problems of overproduction consumerism and prosperity; his first version of "Women of Messina" came out in 1950 and he revised it until his death in 1966. The "conveniences" intrude to overtake the village economy, and in an epilogue Vittorini writes: Time passes ... Rite Hayworth has come and gone. Vespas and Lambrettas obstruct the roads... Young people dance the samba instead of the boogle woogle. The neon lights and the Motta ice cream don't conceal the reality of the situation."

The reader unfamiliar with his previous short novels would do well to begin with "A Vittorini Omnibus" before working up in-terest in the density of "Women of Messina" Included in the ompriors is his tinest work. In Si-city, which upon rereading grows in stature. The revelation by a mother to her grown son shout infidelity remains one of the memorable scenes in Vittorini's besutiful novel, but rauch more emerges about love within a family and how it grows and sometimes grows away.

The other two novellas in the complete are biting portraits of survivors and their effect on families and friends and communities. In "The Twilight of the Employer" and extraordinary grandfather—a powerful "elephant" of a man who lives for the dying crumbs of respect provided by his poverty-stricken family —rejuvenates those around him by an extraordinary act of will In "La Garibaldina," a foryoung soldier on a train journey and teaches him that not every lie is an untruth. It is a mystery stery and also a comment on that overworked phrase the human condition. Vittorini's ability to weite about the dreams of the elderly is remarkable The techniques that give these stories permanence are similar to those of the American and British writers Vittorini studied and translated Running through allthe novels is the train as a device of dramatic movement It is a metaphor the railway-worker'sson-turned-novelist employs nat-urally, with revealing stopovers at stations in the journey of my life." Both books offer a chance to study and enjoy a body of developing work across an engaged lifetime.

Gadocha and Lato. Gadocha at the moment, is the player who has won the most acciaim. But when I spoke to the Polish assistant cosch. Gmoch, in Frankfurt. l, an area near Munich. it was Lato whose praises he was loudly singing: his speed, his fitness, and something he referred to somewhat mystically as "his psychical condition." Clearly it is a case in which personal preference must decide, as between Chaplin and Buster Keaton, Duse and Bernhardt, Tolstoy and Dostoevsky. What matters is that these two, superbly fed by Kazi-miez Deyna in midfield, have bravely carried the Polish fla to bestion after bastion. And le the wicked Brazilians be warned Though the Poles prefer to pla football, they are perfectly caps ble of kicking when they have to as they did fearsomely agains the Welsh in Katowice last Sep

It was rather sad, at Gruenwald, to see Gunter Netzer ship morosely away after the training session. Wolfgang Overath, the man who has replaced that fallen star in the German team, seemed by: contrast exuberent. It is, like Beckenbauer, his third World Cup, and he resists comparisons. Russian Defeats Wade

Evert, Morozova Play for Title

By Fred Tupper

WIMBLEDON, England, July 4 (NYT) .- It will be Chris Event against Oiga Morozova in the women's final. The Russian, who dethroned Billie-Jean King yesterday, came out of the ruck today to triumph over Virginia Wade in a match that raged over 90 minutes on center court with the issue undecided until

At 19. Chris was out there for the second straight year in her arowed intention to capture all the great titles that had eluded her in 1973. Last year, she was finalist at Rome and Paris, Now she reigns there as champion. Today in a start delayed nearly three hours by the rain that bas dogged these championships, she romped over Australian Kerry Melville, 6-2, 6-3, in 47 minutes.

It is a sad commentary that Kerry, rated midway in the world's first ten. was completely out of touch after her decisive upset of Evonne Goolagong yes-The Australian everything. She rushed the net, she attacked Evert on her second serve and every now and then she could control the ball well enough to slide those little short balls low to the backhand which Chris detests. But it was all to

In her 13th try at Wimbledon, dark, brooding Virginia Wade had reached her first semiimal. Over the years, she has won Forest Hills, Italy and the Austrahan titles. Wimbledon has been anathema. The crowd evperts her to win. The headlines blazon her fadures. And her nerves jangle.

Today she seemed to have conquered the lot. In as good a womens' match as you could hope to see. Virginia played beautifully. Keen and fit, she raced out the first set at 6-1 and had two straining, lost the set. 7-5. Morozova has developed a seme-and-volley game more American than any American plays it. She held her service and broke Wade's to love with a full range of shots, amashing deep to the corner for 2-0. And then Virginia shrugged and came back to counter attack. With the crowd in an uproar, she took four games running. Everything came off. Even the netcords were dropping in her favor. She was at 4-2 and deuce, so nearly there.

But Morozova came back as Wade soon dropped her service to level it at 4 all. After getting to 5-4, the Russian broke Wade

Saga of the Great American Bicentennial

By James T. Wooten

DEHLADELPHIA, July 4 (NYT).—Some years ago, a group of locally prominent Democrats went to Washington seeking White House permission for this city to become the official focal point of the country's bicentennial celebration.

They had in mind a grand, international exposition that would bring millions of visitors and dollars into Philadelphia and they reasoned that there could be no more appropriate spot for it than right here where the Declaration of Independence was written, debated and signed.

President John Kennedy greeted them warmly, listened to their plan, smiled and said it sounded like a fine idea, and promptly recommended that it all take place in Boston, another genuine Revolutionary cradle and President Kennedy's home town.

Today, after a dozen years, the American Bicentennial is a fractious, brassy, controversial blend of politics, provincialism, history and commercialism that officially begins next March and comes to a climax exactly two years from today.

Hustlers and Radicals

Thus far, its shape and form have been molded by bureaucrats and scholars, small-town mayors and big-time hustlers, minority groups and millionaires, party hacks and corporate executives, feminists and fund raisers, radicals, reactionaries, reformers, preachers, polisters, pampleteers, polemicists and advertising men.

Its energies have been generated by government funding and private grant, by scores of boards and agencies and commissions and committees turning out reams of proposals and papers and project ideas in which are drawn the dimensions of a celebration that will include everything from the exhumation and reburial of one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence to the renovation of Yankee Stadium

The level of its taste has been dictated by artists and authors cabinet members and publishers, hucksters and street peddlers, the manufacturers of cheap little gewgaws and the distributors of expensive memorabilia The depth of its patriotism has been measured by the ideologies of a naturally contentious country divided even more by the Watergate scandals and their continuing aftermath. As a result, those who try to describe the bicentennial tend to talk about what it is not and those who attempt to define it are at constant odds with each other. Its critics variously contend that it is too large or too limited, too amorphous or too structured, too bland or too crass.

Symbol of Diversity

Some believe it commemorates only what is worst about the country, while others insist that its very diversity most perfectly represents the nation as it is.

The government's official planning for the 200th anniversary of the Revolution began more than seven years ago when President Lyndon Johnson appointed the large and ultimately unwieldy American Revolution Bicentennial Commission.

Its congressional mandate was to "plan, encourage, develop and coordinate" the bicentennial, but in its life span the commission spent much of its time defending itself against charges of partisan politics, some documented by a flood of news disclosures from inside its own bureaucracy.

Consequently, the commission's inability to satisfy either Con-White House or a small but growing collection of public critics led to the creation of other planning groups-most notably the People's Bicentennial Commission and a study group funded by John D. Rockefeller 4th-and, finally, to the dissolution of the commission

It was replaced by Congress with the American Revolution

Bicentennial Administration. In April, President Nixon named John Warner, his secretary of the Navy, to run the new agency.

What Mr. Warner found was that, despite its problems, the old commission had managed to assist every state in the organization of its own bicentennial group, to put together a broad program for commemorative stamps and coins and medals, designated over 250 cities as "bicentennial communities" and established a computerized compilation of all events they deemed relative to the celebration. I think they did a hell of a job," Mr. Warner said not long after moving into offices across the street from the White House. "They turned this thing into a really wide open affair, which is what it was meant to be in the first place."

There are those who do not accept that appraisal of the old commission, for they are persuaded that Mr. Nixon intended to convert the celebration of the country's founding into a celebration of his own presidency.

"Watergate changed all of that," said Jeremy Rifkin, the leader of the People's Bicentennial Commission, a group that seeks to explain the revolutionary ideas of the 18th century in terms of contemporary America. "Nison saw his house come tumbling down around him and so he gave up on the bicentennial as a sort of private Nixon-Republican affair and forgot all about it." Mr. Warner and Mr. Rifkin have debated that issue twice publicly and in both instances Mr. Warner denied the charge, insisting that the Nixon administration has provided the bicentennial with a maximum amount of support, encouragement and cooperation.

Branded as Radical

Nevertheless, the People's Bicentennial Commission, a group branded as "radical" by several business magazines, continues to represent some of the basic problems that Mr. Warner and the federal government face in planning the celebration.

The People's Bicentennial Commission, joined by other, similar groups, has charged that Mr. Warner and the government are attempting to use the bicentennial to cover the scars of the recent government scandals.

Mr. Warner says that is not so. "In fact, I think the bicentennial will be therapeutic to the country if it reminds the Americans of Watergate," he said. "By focusing on that period when the govment was formed, they will see just how stable and solid it is and just how strong it can be in the face of these adversities."

Still, like many others in the government, Mr. Warner seems to have some difficulty when asked to describe the hicentennial. He prefers to answer such questions by saying first what it is not.
"It is not Made in Washington," he said recently. "It is planned and packaged and delivered to the country in a little box marked Take it or leave it."

Idea Abandoned

That is the reason, he and others explained, that the concept holding it in just one city was abandoned. Another of the problems Mr. Warner and his people are facing is in the world of merchandising. Already, there are red white and blue secans and pick-up trucks, and a growing collection of other "buy-centennial" items that include cups and saucers, plates and ashirays and allverware and a very expensive reproduction of General George Washington's sword. There's little we can do about that," Mr. Warner said a few weeks ago. We control the official symbol of the bicentennial and we can prosecute those who use it without our permission, but the world 'bicentennial' and the colors red, white and blue are in the ". rismob sidua For better or worse, the bicentennial has begun and there is a consensus of those in and out of the government that, for better or worse, it is a celebration of the people.
